

Historic Heritage (HH)

Introduction

Sites, and buildings and structures<sup>1</sup> identified as having historic heritage values provide a connection to the past, form part of the District's identity and add significant amenity value to its towns.

Historic heritage is defined as the natural and physical resources that contribute to an understanding and appreciation of history and cultures. It can come from archaeological, architectural, cultural, historical, scientific and technological qualities.

Historic heritage is often at risk through disuse, where buildings and sites become neglected and are particularly vulnerable to adverse effects associated with natural process and climate change, such as earthquakes. The protection of historic heritage therefore needs to recognise and facilitate the continued and active use as well as alteration for hazard protection. Historic Heritage can also be at risk through inappropriate subdivision, use and development.

The District's heritage also includes archaeological sites which are regulated by HNZPT under the HNZPTA. The New Zealand Archaeological Association maps many known archaeological sites at: <https://archsite.eaglegis.co.nz/NZAApublic>. Known archaeological sites in the District include several Māori artefacts, reflecting the nomadic nature of NgKāi<sup>2</sup> Tahu through Te Manahuna. Midden, oven and rock shelters have been identified at these sites. Provisions relating to sites of significance to Māori, many of which are archaeological sites, are contained in the SASM Chapter. Ground disturbance activities may result in the discovery of other, currently unknown, archaeological sites. If an archaeological site is discovered, for example when conducting earthworks, work that could affect the site must be stopped and contact made with HNZPT for advice. It is unlawful to destroy, damage or modify an archaeological site regardless of whether the site is recorded or not, without obtaining an archaeological authority from HNZPT. Council will support landowners to manage, maintain and preserve archaeological sites by obtaining, recording and sharing information about archaeological sites, encouraging the adoption of voluntary agreements or covenant, and ensuring efficient processes by avoiding duplication with other statutory processes.

There are two schedules included in the provisions at the end of the chapter, HH-SCHED1 sets out the criteria for scheduling, HH-SCHED2 identifies scheduled heritage items and their protected elements.

The provisions in this chapter apply in addition to the provisions of the other chapters in the District Plan.
